

Wheelchair Games 2004: Fun For All

It was a day full of skill, triumph, good sportsmanship and even a birthday celebration. It was October 2nd, when 67 athletes from five states and as far away as Ecuador traveled to Burke's annual Wheelchair Games. Participants competed in track (40 to 1,500 meter races), field events (softball, shot put, discus, javelin), slalom and table tennis on Burke's 60-acre campus.

The athletes, who ranged in ages from 5 to 73 years old, represented teams including the North Jersey Navigators, the CT Cruisers, the Lightning Wheels, Young Adults in Action and the Achilles Track Club.

The White Plains High School marching band, led by director Lesley Tompkins, helped kick off the invitational's opening ceremonies. The Honorable Joseph DelFino, mayor of White Plains, Dr. Mary Beth Walsh, Executive Medical Director/ C.E.O.

of Burke, and event chair, Maureen Ryan-Carr, welcomed the crowd and lauded the athletes for their courage.

An enthusiastic crowd fueled the competitors' confidence and smiles as participants demonstrated their ability to overcome physical challenges on the field, track and at table tennis. Athletes and their families also had the opportunity to meet celebrities such as WZ100 radio deejay Skeery Jones, and Ronald McDonald. After an exciting stretch of track races, the day concluded with an awards ceremony to celebrate the contributions of each participant.

Major funding for the Wheelchair Games came from corporate sponsors R. Argento & Sons, Inc., and Gail Steinberg & Co., Inc. Thanks to Ralph Armento and a dedicated group of volunteers, corporate sponsors and contributors, Wheelchair Games 2004 was a tremendous success.

Ricardo Corral from Achilles Track Club team won the 400 meter races on Burke's annual wheelchair games

MARATHON 2004

Annual Race is Moving Toward More Inclusion

PHOTO BY DEANNA SCHWARTZ

Walter Reed Team gets ready to roll.

By Brian Cruise

The human condition is one of the most amazing paradoxes of all things earthly. What can be taken for granted for years without thought, can in an instance become more important than a most prized possession. Especially, when that instance changes a life forever and causes us to re-examine and appreciate the simple gift of life.

For the 30 men and women from the Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., who participated in the New York City Marathon. There was a sense of "never give up." The Achilles Track Club, an international non-profit organization, started a chapter at Walter Reed for soldiers who have come home from Iraq after losing limbs in the war. Achilles sponsored the group, who were enlisted by Mary Bryant, a cancer survivor, former model and special projects director.

One year from the day Capt. David Rozelle started learning to run on a prosthetic leg, he came to run the marathon on a prosthesis decorated with the American flag. He thought that running the marathon was a good way to mark his anniversary.

Navy medic Jose Ramos, who
Continued on page 25

New York City Marathon Nov. 7 - 2004

ABLE Newspaper. Dec/2004

VOLUME 10 NUMBER 7

N.Y.C. MARATHON

Continued from page 1

lost part of his left arm to a rocket-propelled grenade while patrolling with Marines near Fallujah a couple of months ago, also ran the marathon as part of the Walter Reed contingent. He finished in 6:23. "I am very glad to be here, and very grateful to be alive," said Ramos.

Bill Reilly, who has cerebral palsy, competes in a wheelchair, riding backward and pushing with his feet in small increments, which is the only way he can do it. Reilly, 52, of Brooklyn, completed his 15th New York City Marathon at 6:49 p.m., a 26.2-mile journey he started at 8 a.m. at the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge. Asked why he did it, he said, "Because I'm nuts. It's a challenge."

For the elite wheelchair racers it was quite a challenge as well, as three seconds determined the outcome. Saul Mendoza, a Mexican who lives in Texas, won the men's race in 1 hour, 33 minutes and 16 seconds. Krige Schabort, a South African living in Georgia, who finished first in 2002 and 2003, missed winning his third consecutive N.Y.C. Marathon, finishing second in 1:33:19. Kelly Smith, a Canadian, was third with 1:33:24.

"It was a strong field, and it was very difficult to break away. So the last 10 meters, when I saw the finish line, I realized I had it," said Mendoza.

Edith Hunkeler of Switzerland, won the women's pushrim competition in 1:53:27, competing in her first New York City Marathon. Hunkeler broke the course record of 1:59:30, set last year by Cheri Blauwet. Sandra Graf, 35, also of Switzerland, finished 10 seconds behind Hunkeler. "I never expected to catch her," Hunkeler said of Graf, who held the lead throughout most of the race. "I hate uphill, but it was to my advantage today that I could catch her and win."

New York is beginning to equal Boston and Los Angeles in drawing the elite wheelchair racers. Bob Laufer, the wheelchair race director of the marathon said, "Our goal is to be companions with Boston and L.A."

"New York is on the right path because of the treatment they give the athletes," said Mendoza.

The purse is also escalating along with the races notoriety in this, the fourth year as an official division of the marathon.

Todd Philpott, 47, of Australia, won the men's handcyle division in 1:17:12. Angelique Simons, 37, of the Netherlands, won the women's race in 1:50:02. For the first time, this year's handcyle division was classified as a competitive race; it was previously considered an exhibition. Although no prize money was awarded, the top three winners received silver Tiffany trophies.

Winners of the wheelchair division on both the men's and women's side each received $3,500. The prize for second place was $2,500, with $1,500 for third, $1,000 for fourth and $750 for fifth. Jose Ramos and Jennifer Woods won the Avis inaugural "we try harder" award.

The award celebrates people who endeavor to overcome considerable obstacles through courage and extraordinary effort. Ramos is undergoing rehabilitation at Walter Reed, and Woods, who was diagnosed with Multiple Sclerosis 11 years ago, is an advocate for individuals who suffer from the disease and lives in Indiana.