

Prince charming Harry's new friend

Two-year-old Tanner Higgins Rinaldi, born without a right hand, caught the eye of Prince Harry as he joined American amputee servicemen on a charity walk through New York's Central Park yesterday. The boy raised his prosthetic arm and touched fists to the delight of the prince. He spent a few minutes talking to the boy, who was in his mother's arms. Debbie Higgins Rinaldi, of New Jersey, said: "It was absolutely fabulous to meet Harry. I really respect his dedication to the disabled and Armed Forces."
